Message from the President

From the moment I showed up at the JET Board, the other members knew I was trouble. They took one look at my rumpled tweed jacket and my dark, searing eyes, and prayed to God to keep their daughters safe from me.

"Just what are you a Doctor of?" they asked. "Well," I said, filling my pipe with that special blend from Underhill. "What do you got?"

See, I'm not like those public servants who are dedicated to stopping the collapse of reality, promoting social progress, better standards of life and larger freedom.

I'm dangerous. I play by my own set of detailed bureaucratic procedures. I'm a rebel. And I make the ladies swoon.

So don't call me Doctor Taylor Jensen, President of the Board of Trustees, Chief Executive and Head of State PSU Federal Government. Call me Daddy.

I came here to do two things: help the citizens of Penn State, and get some tail—and the citizens are all set. I'm a high-ranking administrator and a lady-killer.

Give me just one meeting with the Commission on Women's Rights, and I promise institutional sexism won't be the only thing they'll be moaning about all night.

I grab trouble by the horns, compile all relevant data, draft a committee report, and deliver a summarized two-minute presentation to the whole Board. I've done it before and I'll do it again. I won't even blink.

I come at you like a bolt of lightning and I don't stop till somebody calls a point of order and politely requests we move on to the next item. But I finish my prepared remarks anyway, because nobody tells me what to do. And if you don't like it, I got four words for you: Kiss my diplomatic immunity.

I left home when I was 18 and never looked back. I started running with a bad crowd, a group of ragtag adjunct professors who were taking on the whole rotten world and didn't care who knew it.

All those years on the open road of academia may have closed off my wicked heart, but I learned a few things, and not just about Nicomachean jive. I'm an expert in comparative mythology, was the head of the Religion and Ethics Department, and I'm handy with a blade. So if you hear one thing, hear this:

If you ever cross me, I'll slash your tires and cut your face. And if you think I won't, ask the Hon. Roland Harriman what happened the time he called me chicken in front of the JET Board. If you can find him.

You don't want to know what's behind these eyes. Nothing but pain, baby. Pain and an intimate knowledge of the positive effect of counterbalancing ENY with an inter-Thread alliance. Dark things. Things you could never understand. So go on home before you get hurt. This is my world, and it's only getting worse."

PENN STATE — Officials from the Institute for Somehow Managing to Hold It All Together warned that, despite their best efforts, everything appears to be falling completely apart and "getting way out of hand," according to a strongly worded report characterized by panic, frustration, and numerous typographical errors that was released on Monday.

"We face a number of pressing issues, including Mesmer's continued expansion, the loss of New Orleans to Apophtis, Reality Eating Maelstroms, and a potential multi-Thread economic collapse," ISMHAIAT chairman Lars Flannagan said during a press conference to announce the study's findings. "And we just can't keep it together anymore."

"Furthermore, we just found out that my fucking hot water is being turned off," Flannagan added.

The report outlines a number of disturbing trends, such as the Penn State/ENY economy suffering in the wake of massive influx of HIVE made Econ, my vespa still being in the shop after three whole weeks, a precarious political situation in LA that remains divided across ideological lines, and the fact that the wife is staying at her sister's and for all I know may not ever be coming back.

"In summary, we have no choice but to accept that managing these complex and varied crises may be untenable at this time," the report concludes. "We're in way over our heads here, people. Oh God. Oh God. What are we going to do?"

The institute, a nonpartisan think tank was formed in 2033 by whoever was in charge of that kind of thing back then as part of the For God's Sake, Somebody Do Something Initiative. In 2038, ISMHAIAT released the now-historic findings on how they had talked and talked until they were blue in the face but they'd had it with these damn teenagers today. And historians still cite its famous 2043 report, a rambling, semi-coherent study titled "The Hell If We Know," recommending the immediate threadwide throwing up of hands.

High-Tech Sex Change for Sutro

LOS ANGELES, L.A., May 14 — Sources close to Oscar Sutro, important shareholder of Standard Oil and a member of the Joint Expeditionary Team, confirm that he "migrated" to a female clone-body.

Pre-Migration Sutro

Sources connected to the medical team that "migrated" Sutro using adapted Silicon Valley technology asserted that Sutro wanted to experience a female orgasm, and therefore decided to go with a female body.

However, upon migration Sutro discovered that she was flat-chested and frigid, much to her frustration.

Dr. Sheeza Freeke of Silicon Valley, head of the Long-Distance Celebrity Psychological Evaluation department at Berkeley, when told about this, said, "She wouldn't want to migrate again... That would mean admitting she was wrong, and that would be totally beyond the cuff."

Dr. Stu Pitt of Silicon Valley, a cloning/biotech specialist, said of the procedure: "The need to lecture everyone is, unfortunately, a side effect of using Technosphere alchemy... I mean, Technosphere technology. In any case,

In reaction to all of this, Dr. Sue Ridge of Silicon Valley, head of Berkeley's Advanced Gender Psychology and Witchcraft department, said, "Just because it's easier due to Silicon Valley's ancient Freemasonic techniques — I mean, our advanced science — doesn't mean it should be done casually. Her frigid state is probably largely psychological, or perhaps the result of evil spirits."

Dr. Freeke, in response to Dr. Ridge, also added: "I imagine Oscar's pathological desire to dominate her surroundings

"We face many challenges in the weeks and months to come. New and frightening bioethics quandaries related to the privatization of human genetics, and, of course, the whole end of the universe thing," the 5,000-page study notes.

"While much has been done to alleviate immediate effects, the situation has become OH FOR CHRIST'S SAKE—I just spilled coffee all over my pants—wait, don't type that—damn it, we're out of paper towels AGAIN—Margo, don't put any of that last part in the report—why are you still typing?"

Some have criticized the report as being alarmist and exaggerated, urging that the we should all just cool out for a minute and see if the situation resolves itself.

"While they have certainly generated plenty of attention, these findings represent an unnecessary overreaction, and should be met with restraint and calm," said Michele H. Wallinachfort of the L.A.-Based Center for Not Worrying About Stuff So Much. "It is my opinion, as an expert in this field, that it's probably not that big a deal."

Wallinachfort's agency is not the only one coming down hard on ISMHIAT. Others have accused the institute of shortsightedness and even gross negligence for failing to keep on top of such issues.

"The current state of affairs is completely unacceptable," said Dr. Hyram Klempner, co-director of the Sitting Around and Expecting Others to Take Care of Everything Foundation, which has historically had a contentious relationship with ISMHIAT. "We rely on the institute to keep things together, yet, evidently, this bloated bureaucracy is incapable of fulfilling its mandate from the people of Penn State. Now I've had to cancel my Oregon golf vacation to return to Penn State and address this issue."

Dr. Thomas Dyers, of the Blame Allocation Council, echoed Klempner's statements, stating that if the ISMHIAT cannot handle its responsibilities, its duties should be turned over to another organization, such as the Fall Guy Bureau, under the supervision of Ed Haversham, the University's Scapegoat Czar.

is related to her self-anger, given to the poor choice made in the migration. Also, I've had lunch with her before, and she's a meany poo-poo head."

On a related note, Dr. Ridge also told us: "We don't recommend this sort of instant sex change without the sort of psychological evaluation and therapy that normally preceded a pre-2012 sex change operation. I mean, seriously, what the fuck?"

Dr. Pit, in response to Dr. Ridge, added, "It's easy to make a cross-sex clone of a male. Just double up the X chromosome. But the results aren't always as good as the patient would like. I mean, Sutro was ugly enough as a man."

Sutro is well-known in LA for having shed his original, aging body and transferred his consciousness to a younger clone, but once she found out the mistake she had made, she concealed her gender. Therefore that part of the story is not widely known, because that's some crazy shit right there.

JET Disputes Resolved by Michael "Mikey" Mahoney

Veteran College Student sports and personal grievances reporter, Michael 'Mikey' Mahoney brings you a first hand account of the inaugural use of the new JET Personal Dispute Resolution System.

General Stevens opened a whole ring of controversy with his directive stating that all personal disputes between JET members would be resolved through boxing matches. The world didn't have to wait long to see if his new initiative could go the distance. Mere hours after the new procedure was put into effect, Team B's Jimmy 'the Lifter' challenged Team A's Bill 'That Other Guy' to a boxing match.

Jimmy's reason: "He looked at me funny." Bill's response to this grave allegation: "Nuh-uh." Clearly a grudge which would put Stevens, and his pugilistic policy to the test.

In the first hurdle to overcome, JET authorities somewhat sheepishly discovered that they had no boxing facilities or equipment. A racquetball court was quickly appropriated, and both men's hands covered with duct tape, and the match was back on.

After 3 rounds, of what in this reporter's opinion was some of the most mediocre boxing to ever appear outside of a cockfight, 'The Lifter' decisively won the match by knocking Bill to the ground with a glancing blow to the head.

Even the screams of pain as the duct tape was removed from both men's hands, could not dampen the fact that the policy, if not the match, was a rousing success. It is now established as fact that "Uh-huh", Bill did in fact look at Jimmy funny. Though with that shiner, he won't be looking at anyone any time soon. As for the policy, only time

In our continuing series of even-handed and insightful analysis of people misunderstood and vilified by the masses, we take a look at our friend John E. Grayer.

While Grayer has been accused of many crimes, and pled guilty to many more that he has yet to commit, we here at The College Student have decided to look at things through his yellow-tinted glasses.

Cursed with immortality and tremendous height, John Grayer began his life as a surprisingly talented Janitor. It was only after Grayer was discovered stealthily writing the answers to a particularly tough math problem that his true talents were discovered. He was a master at breaking and entering. His math answers were, sadly, completely incorrect.

According to his infamously inaccurate memories, Grayer was selected to be a Knight of Pennstad. The Knights of Pennstad will be a quasi-religious order dedicated to travelling through time and

"stirring up some shit." The order has very strict rules against drugs, drinking, sex, or any weaknesses of the flesh whatsoever. Grayer only breaks these rules "when he really really needs to."

Due to a careful calculation on the parts of his mentors, Grayer become lost in time. He is now doomed to travel endlessly over his own immortal life over and over again, "making right what once went wrong." Grayer also occasionally makes right what once went left, and has also been known to make square pegs go into what were once round holes.

Folks pretty much had Grayer pegged as a "well-meaning twit with a head full of bad wires" until the infamous Lawson Murder Case. Grayer has confessed to killing Ted Lawson to prevent a great atrocity that the man would later commit after winning the election. After this it was generally agreed that there was at least one word too many in the above description.

Confidants and enemies alike agree that Grayer's most annoying trait is his casual discussion of how whoever he is talking to will eventually die. His memories or predictions depending upon your relative point of view also lead to endless arguments over who gets statues built of them and who gets ground under history's unforgiving bootheel.

What will Grayer do next? What did he do next in his last nearly identical but somehow significantly different life time that he can barely remember anyway? And has Grayer already gone back in time and changed the way this article began? You'd better go check right now.

There you have it, all the evidence with no judgment. You, the reader, must decide whether John E. Grayer is a black-hearted villain, or merely a misunderstood madman.

The JET is Watching You! Is the JET really watching? And if so how? And from where? In a recent war communique LA industrialist and JET leader Oscar Sutro, Jr. boldly declares that the JET is watching you!

At the risk of coal in his stocking, this reporter decided to find out whether Mister Sutro's claim was true or false.

Does the JET know when we're sleeping? Do they know when we're awake? If they know whether we've been bad or good, should we be good for goodness' sake, or is there a darker purpose here?

These are the facts: members of the JET have infiltrated the highest levels of government. JET membership includes a two-star general, two newly selected Secretaries of State, a President and a Presidential Candidate, several ambassadors, and a sentient tree. Is that tree outside your house as innocent as it seems, or is the JET watching you?

The only question remaining is, what is the JET doing with all of its illicitly gathered data? Are they blackmailing the few remaining leaders outside of its ever-growing influence? Has Oscar Sutro, Jr. really entered a secret clause into the L.A. Constitution that allows the JET to sieze control in times of extreme danger? And if so, is the Sutro Clause coming to town?

This reporter hit the streets asking the tough questions: Do you trust the JET? How do you feel about the JET watching you while you're in the toilet? Is it true that an anonymous Starlet has filed a civil suit against JET personnel claiming personal damages for films of her showering being given away as thanks for campaign donations?

I didn't get any solid answers, but doesn't that really just prove the JET is even more powerful and pervasive than we ever imagined?

If the JET are watching why aren't they doing more? Why has the murder of Ted Lawson gone unpunished? Why is Roland Harriman still missing? Where does my wife go on Thursday nights? These are the questions that we must demand the answers to.

We know the JET is watching, but are they listening? Until the truth is found, this reporter will keep on digging and leave No Stone Unturned!

Mr. & Mrs. Improper-Tea

Dear Mr & Ms Improper Tea,

My boyfriend is from the future and he says that the re-taking of New Orleans will lead to long term instability in the soft magical econ futures.

Is it unethical for me to take advantage of this information? Also, how can I get him to stop snoring? He's driving me crazy.

Sleepless in Schnectody

Ms. Improper-Tea says:

While concerns over insider trading were prevalent before the event, I don't think that your case constitutes this crime. There are people who could do the same with tea-leaves, or fortune cookies. I guess it depends on how ethically you normally live your life. Do you ever tell white lies? Do you declare those gift certificates you get from the grandparents at Xmas on your taxes? If you are someone who is honest to the core, then yes you probably shouldn't speculate on the futures market, since you won't actually be speculating.

As to the snoring, I find holding a pillow over his face until he stops moving is a time-honored and effective remedy.

Mr. Improper-Tea says:

Are you drunk or just stupid? Take the advice, make a fortune and wear fucking ear plugs. This guy is a keeper.
